The Labor Party's nominee for defense minister, former army chief of staff Haim Bar-Lev, said that he sees no reason for Israel going to war with Syria, but that the Syrians should have been given a better understanding in the start of their offensive of where Israel

Mr. Bar-Lev demanded a Knesset committee debate on the Syrian problem two weeks ago, but his party colleagues brished aside the proposal, apparently not realizing that his intention was to focus crit-icism on Mr. Begin's performance in crisis management, party sources said. China Leaders Reach Judgment on Mao; Achievements Found to Outweigh Errors

By James P. Sterba New York Tunes Service

PEKING - A formal judgment of Mao's achievements and mistakes has been reached, Deputy Premier Huang Hua has annormced

After months of delay and debate, Mr. Huang said Thursday that the Communist Party leadership had reached a consensus that the late chairman's triumphs outweighed his debacles. This clears the way for a party meeting and a subsequent party congress that is expected to formally approve the demotion of the current party chairman, Hua Guoleng. In a two-hour meeting with A.M. Rosenthal, executive editor of The New York Thries, Mr. Huang, who is also the foreign minister, emphasized that reports of a power struggle within the party leadership were "imtrue."

Shuffle of Poland's Leadership Expected to Become a Shakeup

By John Damton New York Times Service

WARSAW - The changes in party leadership made at a Central Committee meeting fell far short of what party members advocating change had demanded, but their overall cause was advanced in a number of areas, according to diplomatic analysts.

The personnel changes were more of a shuffle than a shakeup. Jozef Pinkowski, who served as premier during much of the crisis and was replaced in mid-February. was dropped from the Polithuro. His dismissal was something of a foregone conclusion, since he was widely viewed as ineffective and associated with the party's old guard, now in disrepute. His place on the Politburo was taken by two new members, both of them workers who were members of the Central Committee. One is Gerhard Gabrays, a coal miner from Katowice, and the other is Zygmunt Wrouski, a party leader at the Ursus tractor factory outside of Warsaw. The Politburo was enlarged, from 10 members to 11.

There were a few other, lesser changes at the meeting early Thursday. One alternate Politburo member was replaced, and two party secretaries resigned. Giscard Struggles to Unify Conservative Vote Against Mitterrand

By Jonathan Kandell

onal Herald Tribione

PARIS — With little more than a week before the May 10 runoff election for the French presidency, Valery Giscard d'Estaing, the incumbent, is struggling to unify conservative voters behind a frankly and-Marxisi campaign against Francois Mitterrand, his Socialist challenger.

According to a poll due to be published on Saturday hy the weekly magazine Le Point, Mr. Mitterrand is leading Mr. Giscard d'Estaing hy 51.5 percent to 48.5 percent. The poll of 1.892 voters by the IFOP organization was taken last Monday and Tuesday, following a first-round election in which Tuesday, following a first-round election in which the president and Mr. Mitterrand gathered more votes than eight other candidates and qualified for the May 10 showdown.

Political analysis cautioned that the race is too tight to make any poll reliable, that the number of undecided voters is too large and that the French electorate has in the past tended to vote more conservatively in the second round than in the first. Citing these reasons, another major polling organization, Sofres, declined to take an opinion survey between the two election rounds.

Bourse Declines

But there is considerable evidence that Mr. Mitterrand's campaign during the days after the first round on April 26 is proceeding more smoothly and confidently than the president's re-election effort.

dollar since 1974, and in trading before the May Day holiday on Friday the Paris Bourse continued its decline over several days. This was apparently because of fears in the financial community that Mr. Mitterrand might win and impose an econprogram that business leaders feel would be inflationary and threaten some major companies with nationalization. [Details, Page 9.]

Mr. Minterrand is attempting to hold together the leftist electorate — accounting for close to half of the voters — without creating a sense of panic on the right that would stampede marginally conservative voters into the president's camp.

Socialist officials feel that their handling of Communist support has been a key to this campaign goal. The Communists, whose candidate. Georges Marchais, made a dismal 15.4-percent showing in last Sunday's election round, have asked their voters to back Mr. Mitterrand despite the fact that the Socialist leader is refusing to consider Communist ministers or policies for his government if he wins.

According to his supporters. Mr. Mitterrand is now likely to attract some moderate and conserva-tive voters because he has stood firm against Communist demands and reduced their electoral following to less threatening proportions.

The continuing rift in the left between the Socialists and Communists was underscored on Friday hy the trade unions' decision to stage five separate May Day demonstrations instead of a single, large parade. But some Socialist officials said that Mr. Mitterrand had no interest in turning the May Day celebrations into a dramatic, unified outpouring of working class support that would smack of ideological confrontation with the conservative electorate.

According to Socialist spokesmen, their main concern was that isolated violent incidents during May Day might mar the final stage of the cam-paign. "This fear is all the more founded since the only weapon the outguing candidate has today is to only weapon the outgring canonate has today is to play upon fears, because he has no more political arguments to regain his lost majority." asserted a Socialist official, Georges Fillioud, in a party publi-cation distributed on Friday.

Unions for Mitterrand

The two largest labor federations, the Communist-controlled CGT, and the Socialist-leaning CFDT, have come out in favor of Mr. Mitterrand. Mr. Giscard d'Estaing has received strong support from the main husiness executives organization, the CNPF, which warned its members that a Socialist victory would "lead France on the road to collectivism.

The phrasing paralleled Mr. Giscard d'Estaing's The phrasing paralleled Mr. Criscard d'Estaing's anti-Marxist campaign language. At a rally on Wednesday night, he asserted that if Mr. Mitterrand won, France's international prestige would suffer because "a president elected thanks to Communist votes can have no authority, neither in Europe, nor toward the United States nor the Soviet Union"

Yet the president has had a difficult time closing conservative ranks behind his candidacy. Jacques

Chirac, who ran third in Sunday's first election round and leads the neo-Gaullist party, which is the main partner in the president's center-right government coalition, said earlier this week that Mr. Giscard d'Estaing was his personal choice in the run-

But Mr. Chirac has declined to campaign for the president or to call on his followers to vote for the incumbent. And on Wednesday night, the neo-Gaullist party leadership gave the president only lukewarm support and decided not to take an active campaign role on Mr. Giscard d'Estaing's behalf.

Following the party leaders' reunion, n report hy French state television quoted some neo-Gaullist officials as saying they believed that Mr. Mitterrand would win the election by a half-million votes because Mr. Giscard d'Estaing had failed to get stronger backing from Mr. Chirac's followers. Meanwhile, the prospects for a television debate between the two candidates have dimmed. Mr. Giscard d'Estaing, whose successful debate against Mr. Mitterrand was cited as a key factor in the close 1974 presidential race, suggested last Sunday that they hold two debates before May 10 the first on economic issues and the second on foreign affairs. Mr. Mitterrand offered only one debate and insisted that instead of a face-to-face duel, the candidates field questions from four journalists, presumably two leftists and two conservatives. Spokesmen for both candidates said on Friday that a debate might still be scheduled, but that no agreement was yet in sight.

Earlier, a Foreign Office spokesman said that British diplomats had heen "infatigable in ex-plaining" Britain's Irish policy to politicians and journalists in foreign capitals.

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's Cahinet concluded Thursday that Mr. Sands' death as inevitable, officials said. British officials were clearly

Reagan Selects New Head of VA Los Angeles Times Service

WASHINGTON - Robert P. Nimmo, a former California state legislator who led the 1979 fight against actress Jane Fonda's appointment to the California Arts Council, has been nominated by President Reagan to be head of the Veterans Administration.

Mr. Nimmo, 59, is a retired U.S. Air Force colonel. He was a pilot during World War II in England and also served during the Korean War.

He represents a contrast to Max Cleland the VA director under President Jimmy Carter. Mr. Cleand, a Vietnam War veteran and triple amputee, favored Mr. Carter's amnesty plan for Vietnam draft dodgers. Mr. Nimmo successfully opposed the appointment of Miss Fonda, saying her 1972 appeal over Radio Hanoi to U.S. piloss to stop bomhing was an act of

U.S. Preparing Position

They were supposed to have met in March but the meeting was put off until May 27 to give the Reagan administration more time to prepare its position, officials

However, State Department of-ficials said that the Geneva meeting this month is not expected to deal with such crucial policy ques-tions as what to do with the strategic arms limitation agreement that former President Jimmy Carter and Leonid I. Brezhnev, the Soviet leader, signed in Vienna on June 19. 1979.

Mr. Carter suspended Senate ac-tion on the treaty in January, 1980, because of the Soviet military intervention into Afghanistan the preceding month. Mr. Reagan campaigned against the treaty, known popularly as SALT-2. The nomination of Gen. Rowny to the senior negotiator's positions means that virtually every top official in the administration dealing with strategic arms limitation matters is opposed to the previous accord. This list includes Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. and Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger.

Mr. Reagan has said that he supports arms control agreements that produce "real" reductions in the U.S. and Soviet arsenals.

Mr. Haig said last week that, in the administration, "We are assess ing other approaches that might be more hopeful [than SALT-2] and more realistic in the context of reductions. We are looking at possihly functional arms restraint approaches. And, at the proper moment, we will be prepared to enter into negotiations with the So-viet Union on limitations."

Bonn Seeks U.S.-Soviet Talks Timetable

By Bradley Graham

Washington Post Service
BONN — Foreign Minister
Hans-Dietrich Genscher, in a stepped-up effort to persuade the United States to resume talks with the Soviet Union on Europeanbased nuclear missiles, is said to be ready to press U.S. Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. next week for a timetable.

A Foreign Ministry source said Thursday that Mr. Genscher wants "a clear signal for a time frame" at a meeting of foreign ministers of Atlantic alliance countries that starts Monday in Rome. Mr. Haig is to attend.

The West German statement is significant, for while West European officials have made known their interest in seeing arms control talks resumed, they have refrained from publicly pressing the Reagan administration on dates, voicing understanding for its need first to review U.S. policy.

Concern Over Pacifism

The decision to seek a commitment from Washington is a sign of growing concern over pacifist sentiment in West Germany and other European countries, resulting in hroadened opposition to alliance plans to station medium-range nuclear missiles in Europe beginning

Message to Africans

WASHINGTON (WP) — The Reagan administration has told African nations that it is willing to lead the way toward a negotiated settlement of the Namibian conflict but will abandon the effort unless there are realistic prospects of success.

This message was taken to 12 African countries early in April by Chester A. Crocker, who has been nominated to he assistant secretary of state for African affairs, according to a State Department briefing for reporters Thursday.

The possibility that the Reagan administration might disengage from an unproductive international effort on Namibia was "not a threat but a reality," said a State Department official intimately familiar with the Crocker trip. He cannot be named under the ground rules of the briefing.

The new U.S. administration has "a limited ... amount of capi-tal" to expend on foreign affairs and will not continue major efforts in an area likely to produce failure, Mr. Crocker is said to have told the Africans.

fn his recent visit to Angola, Mr. Crocker told the Luanda government that the United States will not establish diplomatic relations without a withdrawal of Cuban troops, according to the State De-partment official.

WASHINGTON — "Laetrile has been tested. It is not effective." In these blunt words, Dr. Charles G. Moertel of the Mayo Clinic announced on Thursday the wholly negative results of a $500,000, federally financed study of the most controversial anti-can-

And after another 10 weeks only a fourth of these still said they felt any better. Laetrile advocates have often claimed their patients feel better even when their cancers remain.

The patients received Lactrile by injection for 21 days then took Lactrile pills three times a day. Few had any serious ill effects. But Dr. Moertel warned that some doctors are doubling their usual Laetrile doses and this "could be

At a news conference, a representative of a magazine sympathetic to Laetrile accused the researchers of using an old, less than optimum form of Laetrile. Dr. Moertel and other specialists said the effect of both forms is the same.

After Reagan's Address

The remarkable thing about Mr. Reagan's presidency has been his ability to keep it focused single-mindedly on his economic strategy. To be sure, there's been an element of luck in it. No distracting blowups have come along abroad, or serious political diversions at home. But it's the intensity of his purpose, as much as the extraordinary personal circumstances surrounding his address to Congress on Tuesday evening, that explains the surge of support that he is current-

Suppose that the administration wins the budget resolution for which it is now pressing hard in the House. What exactly would that mean? It is the beginning of the annual budget process, not the end of it. The resolution sets, in broad outline, the figures that are supposed to guide the committees as they proceed with the actual authorizations and appropriations over the summer. The cooperation of the various committees is not guaranteed. That message was telegraphed earlier in the week when the Senate Agriculture Committee adamantly voted to bust the Reagan budget by a very large margin in behalf of its favorite charity, the dairy lobby.

The resolution will not set detailed spending limits for each program, but only impose guidelines for broad categories of programs. You would be right to conclude that the House's vote on this resolution does not settle the fate of the embattled social programs that some of the Democrats are struggling to rescue. The precise distribution of the reductions and eliminations is left to the months

This aspect of the resolution has special significance for the looming tax issue. With the curious inversion of the Republican and Democratic positions, it is now the Republicans who want the big tax cut and the Democrats who defend the smaller one. The budget resolution only sets a limit to the size of the cut, which means that the administration's favored version of the resolution would also permit the smaller Democratic tax bill. The conservatives of both parties will have spending mainly in mind when they cast that resounding vote on the resolution. But when they have to think specifically about taxes, in votes several weeks from now, the same conservatives may decide to switch sides and support the smaller deficit.

President Reagan clearly had that possibility in mind when he spoke to Congress. He has already seen the depth of the doubts evoked within his own party by the large deficit that he has projected for 1982. In response, he argued, accurately enough, that it is something of a misnomer to speak of a tax cut. More precisely, it will be no more than a cut in the tax increases inevitably and automatically imposed by inflation. Mr. Reagan chided the Democrats for wanting to leave the tax rates too high. The Democrats will reply that Mr. Reagan wants to leave the def-

On the degree to which they are willing to squeeze down spending over the year ahead, the two parties are in astonishingly close agreement. The result is that fiscal policy for 1982 now depends on the votes, beginning next month, on taxes and the deficit.

Poland: Around the Maypole

Although this holiday of revolution has been appropriated by tyrannies in half the world, May Day 1981 may have turned out to be truly memorable. In a year that finds the Polish people inventing a new form of revolution, it is the day on which their Communist "workers" party has been forced to admit two rank-and-file workers, a miner and a tractor factory hand, to its Politburo. And they will be sustained there - if they are by a mind-boggling compact among Polish atheists, a Polish pope, capitalist banks and Soviet tanks.

We don't know whether Gerard Gabrys and Zygmunt Wronski know a fig about managing a country or politicking at the peak of a Communist hierarchy. Their government, party and ideology have made such a botch of Poland that it hardly matters. There is nothing left of sovereign Poland but awesome symbols.

What the two workers symbolize is a convulsion that has thrown up a national Polish union of working people and another of farmers. These instruments of Solidarity insist not only on negotiating over the conditions of work but for direct participation in a radically redesigned Communist system. And now, with the elevation of the two workers to the Politburo, comes a formal proposal from the Polisb Communist leader of elections by secret ballot for all party offices, freedom of debate and limitations on all terms of office. "Renewal," the Poles call it, as if nightingales routinely arise from cocoons each spring.

You may have read that the Kremlin rushed its senior ideologist, Mikhail Suslov, to Warsaw to sound the alarm about this absurd flirtation with democracy. But you may have missed the simultaneous reports of Western underwriting for the revolution. The United States and 14 allies have postponed $2.6 billion in Polish debt repayment this year — to be followed, if Mr. Suslov will restrain his tanks, by similar relief concerning $3 billion owed to Western banks and $2.5 billion in new foreign credits.

As they prepare for the new era, Poland's party units are daring to coalesce "horizontally," without waiting as before for orders from above. Are there no limits? cry the oldtimers. Somewhere, reply the reformers, wriggling between the banks and the tanks. The new system will certainly be unique and dangerous, they say, but also bealthy. Besides, the key government jobs and propaganda will still be controlled by party leaders -whoever they turn out to be.

The Catholic Church counsels other limits. urging the unions to go slow. And Western banks insist on austerity to recoup their loans. The Poles now promise to put the money to work in ways that will throw tens of thousands out of work. So if they really know what they're doing, these romantic people are getting ready to pay for more freedom with less bread.

There wasn't a May Day speaker anywhere with a more remarkable tale to tell.

Conditioning El Salvador Aid

The 26-to-7 vote in the House Foreign Affairs Committee to put conditions on military aid to El Salvador is striking evidence of the misgivings felt on both sides of the aisle about administration policy. There is scant appetite evident in Congress to renew the congressional-executive foreign policy battles that flourished in the Vietnam War period. But eight Republicans on the committee, a majority, joined all 18 Democrats voting to demand that, before new aid flows, the president be obliged to certify that the Salvadoran junta is moving ahead on buman rights, control of its own security forces, economic reform, openness to negotiations and free elec-

Something important has happened since the Reagan administration set out two months ago to demonstrate that "the Communists have intensified and widened" a local insurgency and made El Salvador "a textbook case of indirect armed aggression by Communist powers through Cuba." The administration made that demonstration, to the satisfaction, we surmise, of most legislators. But something else has been demonstrated that the administration paid little attention to two months ago. Some activities of the junta are reprehensible and self-defeating. You don't have to call this a contradiction, just a development, but it has to be dealt with somehow.

The administration's way is the old whisper-in-the-ear approach: Pledge fidelity and support and with it gain a hearing and leverage to tip the balance within the junta away from the rightists and toward the moderates. This is not an insubstantial theory, but it carries the familiar risk that the junta's hardliners will simply pocket the military aid and run. It was to head off this possibility that the House committee voted to tie the aid. The rationale is to give the Salvadoran moderates the extra muscle they need to sway the hard-liners.

We are sympathetic to the purposes of the House committee but dubious about its remedy. It seems to us too early to be writing a law on the premise that the administration, which insists it supports the House's purposes, is acting in bad faith. It may be useful for the administration, in its dealings in El Salvador, to be able to show that a good number of Americans are breathing down its neck and demanding a principled performance. Our sense of things is, bowever, that while the administration could use some expressions of concern about El Salvador, it doesn't need this hard a shove -at least, not

Missing: 300 Million People

By Ben Wattenberg

WASHINGTON — Three hundred million people have disappeared during the past decade. Most of those missing persons were from the poor countries of the Third World. They are gone. Lost forever.

These people were victims nei-ther of a cruel famine nor of a tyrant's repression - but of plung-

The missing 300 million Third Worlders are, of course, only a statistical artifact. They are people who, back in 1968, UN demographers predicted would be born by the year 2000. But by 1978, as birthrates kept falling the same demographers predicted that those 300 million people would not be born by the turn of the century.

These changing projections point up a fact of our modern circomstance that has received very little attention. Yet it is a fact at the root of many modern distor-

Receding

What is happening is that around the world, the so-called 'population explosion" is receding and quite rapidly in most

Now, this does not mean that our planet won't ultimately house more people than it now has. This earth will indeed have more people - at least several billion more before we level off — and those new billions will cause some problems as they arrive. Even a lower growth rate still yields some growth until and unless it reaches zero.

But what is also apparent is that those nightmare scenarios of evermore nonstop billions of starving people packed like sardines in a can will never come to pass.

A brief look at data from the 20 most-populous countries provides a flavor of what's going on. These top 20 contain 75 percent of the world's population. (The numbers were assembled by the United Nations and analyzed by the U.S. Census Bureau's International Demographic Data Center, maestro Samuel Baum presiding.)
Seven of the 20 biggest nations are categorized by the United Nations as "more developed." They are the United States, the Soviet Union, Japan, Britain, West Germany, France and Italy.

Six of these seven nations are already at fertility levels that would lead to actual declines in population in years in come. The Russians are only a smidgen away. Today, when planners in most of these "rich countries" look into the future, they are less concerned about a population explosinn than about labor-furce shortages.

But the biggest demographic question marks in recent years have concerned the major nations of the "less developed" world. A quick tour of these poor nations shows declines in birthrates everywhere, although at very different

Big Daddy China

Begin at mainland China with almost a billion people today; it is surely the Big Daddy of nations when ranked by population. In the early 1950s, the mainland Chinese had an annual birthrate of 40 children per 1,000 people. By the late 1970s, just a quarter of a century later, that rate had fallen to 22. By comparison, the U.S. birthrate to-day is 16; that is about what the United Nations predicts China's will be by the end of the century.

India is No. 2 in the world with 667 million people. It has been thought of as a demographic bas-ket case. India has had a much more moderate drop in birthrate than has China. In the late 1950s, India recorded 43 births per thousand; today the rate is about 35. But that drop is more significant than it may seem. A nation only has to achieve rates in the midteens to get to population stability over time. That means that in the past 20 years India got about a third of the way to rates that will produce zero population growth. The UN projections show India's birthrate dropping to 26 within the next 20 years — that's yet another third of the way there.

Still High

Similar declines in birthrate are apparent in the two next-largest poor countries, Indonesia and Brazil. As recently as the early 1960s, Indonesia's birthrate was 46; now it's about 36. Brazil's was 44 in 1950; today it's about 30.

On the other hand, Bangladesh, Pakistan and Nigeria have all shown much smaller declines. Each had birthrates of around 50 in the 1950s and are only down to the mid-to-upper 40s today. That's still high.

about 20 billion while the low-ball demographers are talking about 2 billion. In short, many billions of people have statistically vanished!

The remaining six big nations in the less-developed world break down this way: The birthrates of Thailand, Turkey and Mexico have dropped about 10 per thousand; that's a bigger decline than India's but not as sharp as China's. The Philippines and Egypt have lost about five per thousand. Data for Vietnam does nnt exist. For good measure, South Korea, the world's 21st largest nation, has seen a stunning drop in its birthrate, which has declined by about half in only the past 20 years, from 45 to 22.

Vanished

The leverage of these sorts of deelining rates is incredible. It's not just those missing 300 million. The differentials also involve many bil-

Thus, the nften-bizarre "Global 2000 Report" commissioned by Jimmy Carter cites a harumscarum projection dealing with a world population of almost 30 billinn in the next 120 years. (We now bave 4.5 billion and are expected to grow to 6 billion by

But Carter's environmental activists were way out of touch. Even a few years ago the professional demographic alarmists were saying the world would grow to 15 billion to 20 billion people before leveling off. The "moderates" at that time were predicting a peak of 12 billion to 15 billion people.

cent birthrates, the low end of the moderate projections come in at

Moreover, what is never talked about is the thought that if some countries today have negative fertility rates, might not one day the world population as a whole de-Are there some lessons to be gleaned from all this? I think so.

The first is this: There are no immutable projections. When some big out-of-town jasper with a pocket calculator comes up to you and says, "If present trends continue ..." — hold onto your "Present trends" involving peo-ple typically don't continue, partic-ularly if the trends are unfavorable. They change — because, un-like pocket calculators, people have control of their destiny. Birthrates were very high in this world when many infants did not survive. When those infants began surviving, birthrates began to drop. Mothers no longer had to rear six kids in order for two or three to live to adulthood.

That's called "the demographic transition" and it concerns individuals making very personal and log-ical decisions with little regard to the fellows with pocket calculators. Second, what is seen as bad news drives out what is seen as good news. The alleged "popula-non explosion" dominated our consciousness for a quarter of a century, its recessional march now attracts little attention.

Third, what's seen as bad news sion" was regarded as "bad news" because the fellow with the calculator said that if you split a pie among more people, each person has less. That's an argument that may never be proved.

A famous demographer has noted that every baby comes equipped with not only a mouth but also with hands. People not only consume but also produce. That makes the pie grow. And isn't it odd that just about every nation in the world substantially raised its standard of living precisely while the "population explosion" was going on?

Finally, science and statistics become ideological handmaidens. Thus, the (distorted) perception of the population explosion quickly yields corollaries: We're running out of resources, it's an era ni limits, the rich are unfair to the poor, we need a new world economic or-

A Pattern

Not surprisingly, the fellows with the hot calculators will also be happy to tell you how to fix things. All you have to do is follow a handy little 17-point program that happens to be already typeset and at the printers.

What we see, then, is a pattern that is observable elsewhere in our society: We trumpet and politicize bad trends that may not be bad and may not be trends:

That's bad. As for me, a political man, I trumpet only the idea that the projections of doom will not survive. Certainly not if present trends continue.

PARIS - Both the arithmetic and the politics of France's final mund of presidential elections are so tricky that the dominant view here now is that it is too close

Still, I think there is a tilt favoring the return of President Valery Giscard d'Estaing nn both counts. In terms of numbers, the candidates on the right side of this country's still sharp dividing line outpolled the combined if feuding left in last Sunday's first round.

In terms of inclination, more than half of France is still essentially fearful of drastie ebange. It would like what Mr. Giscard d'Estaing promised in his 1974 campaign and failed to deliver satisfac-torily: "Change Without Risk."

De Gaulle's Disdain

That failure is Mr. Giscard d'Estaing's main problem, but it is also the problem of the political system established by Charles de Gaulle. In his disdain for the party hag-gling and in-fighting which brought revolving-door govern-ments after World War II, Gen. De Gaulle created a structure which makes a transfer of power very difficult and concentrates extraordinary, almost unchecked power in the presidency.

But it evolved, ironically, into a four-party system, rather than the broad consensus on one side against a strong Communist Party on the other, which was Gen. De Gauile's preferred base.

And the four have developed such an intricate set of rivalries, imposing such complex maneuvers for advantage, that voters are left to simplify their choice in terms of their gut distaste.

Chirac Encouraged Essentially, the decision on May 10 will only answer the question of what the French electorate considers the greater risk it faces. Mr. Giscard d'Estaing, 55, has lost popular appeal. He is the first president of the Fifth Republic to complete a term. Another seven years, as 64-year-old Socialist candidate François Mitterrand points out, seems a long, long time, hardly credible.

In fact, it's hardly likely unless a newly elected Mr. Giscard d'Estaing dramatically changes his authoritarian style of government, also unlikely. The constitution pro-vides no clear definition of the powers of executive and legislature, nor a tolerable way for them to live together in mutual opposition as sometimes happens in the United States.

The next Assembly elections are for a kind of old-boy net of speci-due in 1983, though the president ally trained high officials to form a ally trained high officials to form a frustratingly closed inner circle of uncontrolled authority. The itch to challenge it won't be appeased by a second Giscard d'Estaing man-

> Another development, probably more important in the long run, has been the drop in Communist votes to just over 15 percent, lowest since the liberation of France. French analysts are a bit uneasy in pronouncing this a definitive trend. It might be reversed in other circumstances, but if it holds it will change the whole landscape of French polities.

Mutual Contempt.

The Communists are telling their voters to back Mr. Mitterrand now in an attempt to re-es-tablish their claim to be arbiters of whether or not power can change hands. But they openly distrust the Socialists and make clear they would do nothing to ease the way of a Mitterrand regime if they help elect one. The contempt is mutual. All this could bring an end to the Communists' power to block emergence of centrist government, which the French really seem to want. And that would create the possibility of moderate swings, without cataclysmic ideological choice at each election. But such a healthy evolution isn't yet within

Whatever happens on May 10, the once dense texture of French politics has grown brittle. Gen. De Gaulle sought stability and im-posed immobility. The price of making it too hard to transfer power gently is to provoke painful tures. There are risks of crisis for France either way now, but also signs of an eventual breakthrough to a more supple democracy beyond the Communists' power to foil.

extendesch is suddenly in the air. His er compave been featured in festivals in San ge: Butisco, all over his native Germany, in bout sere, France and, last month, in Paris, where four of his films were shown at the Cinematheque ia the presence of the writer, director and leading man — all three Herbert

Aebternbusch. He's the distributor as well: You go to his house, leave a deposit, and the film is yours. Meanwhile, the Comedie de Caen is putting on his play, "Ella" under the direction of Claude Yersin. This month, his latest film, "Der Neger Erwin," (The Nigger Erwin) will premiere in his hometown, Munich. And, in July, a pro-duction of his second play "Susan," will go to the Avignon festival

Why all the fuss? It's impossible to get an intelligent answer out of anyone. Newspapers, fellow filmmakers, critics and writers picking up on Die Zeit constantly accuse the acvelist, playwright and filmmaker of being a genius — and worse. Doo't look to Achternbusch for an explanation. The comie writer doesn't take any of it very seriously.

He had been writing for 12 years when a literary jury awarded him the Petrarca prize in 1977, the largest cash award for literature in West Germany. The award ceremony took place in Frascati, Italy. "There must bave been at least 100 people from the German Kultur scene," he recalls. "I oever saw so many idiots at one time. I found out the whole thing was so they could eat and drink. I drank more than the others because I couldn't stand it."

As the festivities were on, Achternbusch quickly had enough and pushed a giant Pinocchio balloon into the spaghetti yelliag:
"There's your Achternbusch!" He demanded the money, which was handed to him by the donor's trembling son. Achternbusch raised the 20,000-Dentsche mark ($10,000) cbeck above his head and, to the amusement of the Italian wedding party behind him and the horror of the Germans before him, set it on fire.

Achtembusch does not like to be winningly polite in public. And his bad taste is legendary. After playing a pope in his film "Der Junge Moench" ("The Young Monk," 1978), be decided to issue a film encyclical - just at the moment of John Paul I's death. In his mock Bull, published io Die Zeit, he counsels a few friends - Schloendorff, Handke, Fasshinder

and Herzog — to stop making films.

Tall, this and preceded by his terrifying reputation, the 43-year-old Achternbusch is known to hold his beer. He has come to Paris' La Coupole to try his luck with French wine. Achierabusch appears quite sociable and one is soon convinced that he is utterly friendly. He gives a friend some snull to try, saying. "The American cowboys put this in their eyes to stay awake during loag cattle drives." Then he starts arm wrestling — cheating so he can win. He turns serious.

Talk soon shifts to Bavaria, where, be says, "there's more ice than in Greenland." His Bavarian roots are deep: "The farm outside Musince 1227. My father's side is from Sweden and Holland. In 1836 his great-great-grandfather had had enough of Edam and cheesemaking and went off to Marseilles, where be married the first gypsy whore he met." We have bere a subtle variation on Thomas Mann's be-loved "Kroger-casserole": Mediterranean mystery marries Northern light.

His pet monsters are Franz Josef Strauss, the one no one dances to, and Hitler. "Strauss [leader of the Christian Social Unioa] is a monster of stupidity and as for Hitler, you know art will never equal his violence. Brutality can be let loose in art but never in life. Imagine instead that Hitler had painted six mil-lion tortured Jews on icons. What happiness that would bave been! I was born in 1938 and Achternbusch wants to disengage films.from the studio "system" and encourage others to do the same. With his well-written scripts and low film budgets, be cannot understand why it takes others millions to make a film.

"In 1975 'Die Atlantiksebwimmer' cost me 70,000 Deutsche marks, all of which I'd inherited from my mother," he boasts. "Der Junge Moench' [The Young Monk] cost 140,000 marks, and every one of my six films has paid for itself many times over - even though some of them have not been shown on television and none has been commercially distributed." All his actors, except Margarethe von Trot-

Herbert Achternbusch, the Bavarian novelist and filmmaker with a comic vision. a, are amateurs who take off from bartending and delivering mail to work for him. Achtern-husch explains: "I aced real people for my ilms, people who work." How does he view his own work? "I don't want my films to have anything to do with reality.... They're docu-mentaries of the state of things in Germany. I refuse to let reality come sonking around in

"Der Bierkampf" (The Beer Battle, 1976), which prompted Die Zeit to label him a genus, cost 80,000 Deutsche marks and comes diectly out of Achternbusch's past. "In 1960, I worked for the first time under a beer tent at the Oktoberfest and again in 1961. Being a cigarette vendor was my first publie self, carrying a cigarette tray across my stomach. 'Bier-kampf' is the fruit of my endeavors."

As the camera descends into the Oktoberest, Herbert Achtembusch makes a "kamikaze entrance" as a man who has stolen a poiceman's uniform. He wants to be seen, recognized and respected. Can one not recognize a policeman? But this one wears no socks. "I chose to do this the day all the blue-collar workers come to the Bierfest. And a policeman in Germany is ant like a policeman in the United States. When you see a policeman in a U.S. movie, he's usually a clown. 10 Germany he represents the state, he inspires fear. When people saw me, they thought I was the police until they noticed the camera and that I wasn't wearing socks."

With Werner Herzog's cameraman Schmidt-Reitwein following every move, he takes an unrehearsed dive-bomb into the narrow benchlined alleys of the beer metropolis. He stuffs food in his mouth, slobbers and drowns himself in beer. Some drinkers are amused; others are horrified by the policeman-gone-ape. They attack him with their fists. This was in 1976. The aext year Hans-Martin Schleyer was kidnapped and killed by the Red Army Faction. People didn't appreciate my making fun of the police, and as a result of this film I received many death threats. Others offered to burn my house down."

lo "Der Junge Moench" we have the end of the world, filmed as a documentary of the present. Achternbusch explains: "All is waste:

Few have survived. One of the survivors searches for God. God is a chocolate Easter bunny he finds in the cemetery. Wasn'ı iı this way before? Munich is a geyser, and only in its suburb of Buchendorf can one still find an unravaged zone" — coincidentally, Achtern-busch's home aeighborhood.

Because of its sacrilegious scenes, this film did not go over with the German television censors. But Achternbusch was too busy to care — he was writing radio plays ("Absalom"), screenplays for Volker Schloendorff ("Uebernachtung in Tyrol," or Overnight in Tirol) and Werner Herzog ("Heart of Glass"), and plays, such as "Ella," which takes place in a henhouse equipped with television, coffee grinder, bathtub and stove — as well as seven live white Hebrides hens (as staged recently by the Berlin Schaubuehne company.)

In his hilarious 1979 film, "Der Komantsche," Achternhusch plays a Comanche Indian, the last patient in a German lung sanatorium. He's in a coma after his wife shot him four times. The aurse-turned-doctor has hooked his dreams to a television set where we see endless elephants, boys, temples and Achternhusch wandering among the pachyderms asking each: "Are you my child? Are you my

The videotapes of the dreams, sold by his wife, become a hit television series. He, meanwhile, is trying to awaken from his coma. Fi-nally, he comes to in a packed soccer stadium. "When I was dreaming I bad an idea of how I could live with people. But aow that I'm awake and see people I doa't have a single idea. Not a single idea. Keine Idee mehr."

If you tell Achternbusch you like his films, he'll answer: "My films are aot films. I am doing something but act making a film. I am like a child. I wanted to make incomparable films and then I saw mine and realized they weren't films, but documentaries."

La Comedie de Caen will perform Achtern busch's "Ella" in Dieppe on May 5, in Caen May 7-9. The Munich premiere of his film "Der Neger Erwin" is scheduled for mid May. "Coeur de Verre" (Heart of Glass) will be screened at the Paris cinema Daumesnil on May 4 and 5.

Diminutive and dainty as a china doll, Miss Cultber has the dignified bearing and erect posture of a grande dame of the dance. She seemed mildly surprised to hear that few of today's choreo graphers create socially conscious dances:

"Perhaps its different for us in Sweden," she suggests. We are a small country very far away and we feel concerned and dependent on what happens in the rest of the world. For us, it is important that the artist speak out against and beauty of the movement itself. "First of all," she explains, "you must choose an idea that can be given a physical shape and kinetic form. Then, you must choreograph the idea, not with pantomime, but with all the elements of dance — dynamic coloration, rhythmic organization and tension between the dancers in space."

Cullberg's most direct heir is her own son, ma, focuses on the tyrannical mother as a symbol of repressive forces. Her daughters' resistance expresses the continuing struggle for libcration.

Ek sometimes makes specific reference to political events: His "Soweto," for instance, commemorates the South African ghetto uprising. The ballet's impact is guaranteed by the appearance of the long-retired Miss Cuilberg herself in the role of Mother Africa. Her mea-

Although Cullberg enjoys the part and the coatact it gives her with the dancers, she is the same narrative genre, his ballets tend to unsubtle, pantomimic and predictable. Unlike many older dancers, she has on difficulty accepting the limitations of age. On the contrary, she finds in a loag life rich inspira-tion to continue eboreographing for her com-pany — an endeavor she plans to resume with redoubled vigor.

Cullberg's own ballets veer into the personal, with a lyrical tone and softer shades. Like many of ber previous works, her latest piece, "Reves de Vie et de Mort," draws on personal experience. A funeral is interrupted by the intrusion of the dead man's long-estranged first wife, who abandons herself to reliving memories of their love, quarrels, joys and disappoint-ments. The ballet distills raw emotion into an uncluttered, if highly charged, movement idiom.

Discussing her "theater of burnan feelings," Cullberg pauses to reflect whether her work "isn't, I suppose, a bit old-fashioned?"

It is more a passing query than a real con-cern for this very individual artist who has always been detached from trends. It is also an ironic moment of self-doubt for a choreographer whose many ballets about women throughout the 1950s anticipated feminist consciousness by a decade.

Today, as resolutely dedicated to her "oldfashioned" approach as ever, Culiberg is none-theless in time with the contemporary issues. She is planning to update her 1950 masterpiece "Medea," focusing on the problems of chil-dren of feuding and divorced parents. She is also thinking about a ballet that explores the liberated woman's conflict between professional goals and personal attachments.

Cullberg is also, surprisingly, an expert oa the medium of the future — video drama. Now that her complete works are being taped for Swedish television, she has become an authority on directing dance for the camera. But if she is intrigued by angles, close-ups and special effects, it is primarily because they expand dance's potential to express buman experience and portray the world we share.

The Cullberg Ballet is now performing at 8:30 p.m. at the Theatre de la Ville in Paris. Until p.m. at the Inegire ac to Vide in Paris. Unite May 3, the program includes Birgit Cullberg's ballet "Au Bord de la Foret Profonde" and Mats Ek's ballets "St. George and the Dragon" and "La Maison de Bernarda;" May 5 to May 10 includes Jiri Kylian's "Stoolgame," Mats Ek's "Soweto," Luc Bouy's "Tes Yeux" and Cullberg's "Reves de Vie et de Mort."

When in Rome.

by Melton S. Davis

OME - When asked what it's like to live in Rome today, foreign residents tend to answer, "Not as bad as you'd expect." In fact, it's much bette Italy may have few material resources, but it has one life-saving attribute — its people. Ualess you're a complete misanthropist, you make friends, and Roman friends are invaluable. They help you cut through the red tape, find a place to live, eat and get a discount, have clothes cleaned without paying a fortune, find the quickest and most inexpensive way to get repairs doae (everyone has a favorite lumber or electrician, usually moonlighting).

Not long ago a bank teller asked a forcign client, "How do I get by? My salary is low, but I have a car. My clothes are custom-made, and eat very well...but with what I make it's

He figured out that it must be the cooperation between friends and relatives and an un-publicized exchange of personal information. Longtime residents know that if there's something they can't find, they mention it to a cleaning woman or barber, and there's an uncle or a cousin who has access to the desired commodity. Says an English newspaperman who bas lived in Rome for the last 10 years, Everyone has a fiddle going oo the side.

Living here gives foreigners a sense of per-manence, the feeling that basically nothing has changed. Even if the language is different and manners vary, you can't help but come across people and situations straight out of earlier

Inevitably, the foreigner takes on Italian at-titudes. Italians are fatalistic—they've seen it all before. To them, monuments are only buildings - kids will use the columns of a ruined temple as a set of goal posts. Living in Rome means dealing with leisure-loving offi-cials, surprise strikes and endless petty annoyances, but one also fiads dignity, respect and compassion. The family unit survives despite wars, unrest and political crises. If you cateb a cold. a Roman neighbor will come to cure you

At bome, apartments small and large have flowered terraces and balconies. "Nowhere can you live as well to a metropolitan area," says

John Howard, an Australian photographer. The important thing in Rome is to get used to the local coocept of time. Banks have the ortest bankiag bours in the world, 8:30 a.m. 1:30 p.m., five days a week. Hardware stores are closed on Saturday afternoons, food stores on Thursday afternoons. This all changes by the season and, if there are any holidays, during the week Meeting in Rome isn't easy, oor is keeping an appointment, so Romans have the habit of making dates without referring exactly to the time and specifying places where friends are usually to be found. However, waiting is not taken as a hardship. Wise residents have adopted the Roman attitude toward time: It doesn't exist. So there's a lusty enjoyment of the present. It's ao use worrying about terrorists, thefts, strikes and other unpleasant occu-rences. Life may be apprehensive, but it goes on. People cope. Day-to-day contact with Romans, despite the strain of coping, is pleasurable. People smile, joke, are helpful. Which may he why Italy often works better during the frequent government crises. Because then the individual rakes over.

Despite this carefree atotude, or possibly because of it, Rome has survived. Razed by fire, ravaged by invaders and devasted by civil wars, it has been rebuilt again and again. Some say that its life force has been inherited from all those barbarian invaders. The past for Romans isn't dry; it's a live present that dispels any fear of the future.

"Things can't get worse than they are and have been in centuries past," says a university professor. "When you come from a people who bave faced everything from famine to pes-tilence, fires and floods, you learn to live for

When he is not at work in his own garden studio in Wimbledon, he may well be on a plane to Zurich, to repair surface damage to a Kandinsky, or off to Los Angeles to check the condition of an Impressionist collection. Or he is winipping through London in a black Saab, visiting such regular clients as Sotheby's and Marlborough. Meanwhile, another Magritte has just arrived from Houston.

Like many restorers, John Bull began his career as an art student. In his first years at the College of Art in Bristol he studied everything from architectural drawing to sculpture and cabinetmaking, but he ultimately concentrated on painting. He showed no particular talent, he now argues, but was intrigued by the sheer craft and spent much of his time copying works, including Persian miniatures.

"You may have a future as a faker," his teacher commented, "but never as a painter."

The drawings he made in the Bristol Art. Gallery caught the eye of Director Hans Schubert, who suggested that he apply for a post on the staff. Schubert himself was a trained restorer who had founded one of England's first provincial departments of restoration. For the cext 18 months, John Bull learned his basic skills, under the old formula of being thrown in at the deep end. He learned them so well that the Tate Gallery lured him to London in 1958, and he spent the aext six years at the museum. Before leaving Bristol, he recommended his younger brother David, who had studied interior design at the Art College, as his successor. After 18 months, be too would depart for London, to work for six years at the National Gallery and to build an international reputation as a restorer of old master canvases.

Shopkeepers get to know you and take a keen personal interest in you and your family. If after moving into a new neighborhood, you have friends to dinner, a storeowner or a neighbor will suggest that you tell someone from the trattoria below so that nothing is stolen from the cars.

Many feel that the capital, as Espresso magazine says, "remains the center of urbanity and mutual respect." The tempo of life may have speeded up, but the pace remains slower than that of almost any other world capital. People still stop in the middle of the street as if the automobile hadn't yet been invented.

Romans manage on the whole to retain a certain estimable quality of life. On weekends, they rush to the oearby sea and hills, hardly bothering to ootice that the beaches are dirty. only honest but go out of their way in dealing with foreigners."

This is attested to by Glenn Henderson, who manages a financial counseling service in Rome. Returning from a trip, he was met at the airport by his wife. Only when they arrived home did they discover that his briefcase, with passport, travelers checks and important pa-pers, had been left behind in the parking area. Driving back, he asked the attendant if it had been seen. "Si, signore," was the prompt reply.
"I've been holding it for you; I thought you'd miss it," and he returned the case, unopened.

The saving grace of Rome is that it's often enough to look out of the window to feel good about living bere. When the sun is on high and the air has the quality of velvet. Rome's climate can make the world envious. American spiritual singer, Archie Savage, says: "I ker it" putting off leaving Rome, I know I'll only able to go if I'm sure that I'm coming back = 1.

Annie Wu's Hong Kong Food Empire

by Jane Wilkens Michael

ONG KONG - The restaurant business has always been a family industry. But the image of Mama slaving over a hot stove while the kids take orders isn't always accurate.

Nowadays, the children simply open their own restaurants. The bistros of Patrick Terrail and Michel Oliver, nephew and son, respec-tively, of two Paris three-star restaurateurs, are the toasts of Los Angeles and Paris.

In male-dominated Hong Kong, there's a further twist. Annie Wu, the 32-year-old daughter of James Wu, founder of a restaurant chain and catering company here, has become an entrepreneur in her own right.

Raised here, Annie Wu went abroad to Berkeley, Calif., to study business at the Armstrong Business College, followed by further work at the International Marketing Institute in Cambridge, Mass. While at school, she also worked part-time in a U.S. accounting firm, a shoe factory and an insurance company.

After her graduation in 1970, she says, "I wanted to start out on my own, but unfortunately, in Hong Kong, women rarely get anywhere without good connections."

Her father gave her a chance: He made her controller and public relations representative for his Hong Kong Government Pavilion Restaurant at Expo "70 in Osaka, Japan. "Being the boss' daughter is not the best of all worlds," she insists. "It requires a great deal of delicacy and diplomacy. I found it much harder to succeed because everyone was looking for

In 1971, hack in Hong Kong, she was involved with setting up the first Jade Garden Chinese Restaurant, and in 1975, its sister, the Peking Garden. Over the next few years these grew into a chain of 20, the largest in the city, some of them small and gourmet, others large, plain and inexpensive.

With this experience behind her, she was fi-nally able to set up a business: Star Promotions Limited, a parent company for her different projects. One of these is the 2,000-member-

Restaurant entrepreneur Annie Wu.

World Trade Centre Club, a dark, plush pravate businessmen's club whose select membership, ironically, is almost entirely male.

A member of Les Disciples de L'Auguste Escoffier, she is also executive director of both the Jade Garden Restaurant in Tokyo and the Beijing Air Catering Company, a joint venture with CAAC, the national airlines of the People's Republic of China. Her company has the exclusive contract to provide meals for CAAC and 14 other sirlines flying out of Peking. Annie Wn's most original project has been organizing three blocklong craft centers here: the Yee Tung, Harbor and Chi Fu. "In creating these, I hoped to preserve the ancient Chinese folk arts and crafts that are being forgotten as mass production takes their place," she says. About 3,000 people visit the three ba-zaars every Sunday. Craftsmen, dressed in traditional robes, make sandalwood fans, Dragon's Beard candy, cook Chinese noodles and give seminars on everything from egg roll stuffing to forume telling to acupuncture. Annie Wu's youth sometimes leads to confusion. On a recent trip to Paris, she made a appointment with the director of the Hon-Kong Tourist Association. Signals were solucrossed, and when she arrived, he thought shatory was an assistant sent over by the head office. Stant He was further nonplussed by her suggestion that they hunch at the posh three-star Parmore restaurant. restaurant, Lasserre. He finally realized who not she was when Rene Lasserre rushed over total welcome her and offer her a membership to his by Casserole Club, an honor reserved for distinguished politicians, executives and celebrities. ide-Annie Wn took it all in stride. Between in Maxim's (her father's Hong Kong catering company, with no connection to the Paris restaurant) and the World Trade Centre Club.

she has organized banquets for some of the most famous people in the world, including yer Queen Elizabeth and the Duke of Kent.

She is most proud of the feast she put logether for Prince Charles. "We had only 45 for minutes to serve an entire nine-course lunch-to eon. I selected different dishes from several re-the gions to provide an insight into the full spec-at trum of Chinese haute cuisine, and it was a antremendous success."

While the banquets are dazzling occasions, rid the dishes may not always appeal to a West-iderner's taste. Bear paws with pine seeds, bra-no ised elk trunk and boiled turtle require a cer-ias tain culinary openmindedness — as do snow he frog fal and moose nose (of which, she says, its "The marrow on the inside is quite delicious.")

Occidentals, however, would probably be interested in her latest project; a symposium on a French wine and Chinese cooking, scheduled here in November, that features French food at critics Henri Gault and Christian Millau.

Despite her independence in business, An-re nie Wu still lives at home, in her family's penthouse near the Mandarin Hotel. "There is no t special man in my life right now," she contends. "I keep completely busy with my present work and future projects."

And what will these include? "I would very much like to set up Chinese restaurants in London, Paris and possibly New York." If Annie Wu has her way, it won't be long before moose nose is on everyone's lips.

erty consigned by the Hagop Kevorkian Fued in New York, the buy-in rate was negligible— only 1.5 percent. But apparently this was so chiefly because some items had low reserve prices. An exceedingly good Persian miniature of the early 16th century illustrating an epi-sode from the Golestan written by Sacadi in the late 12th century was a giveaway at £115. So was a Persian miniature from the Bukhara school painted around 1530-1540. The master known from other works is identifiable and £780 is surprisingly little for a masterpiece.

However, low prices were not just paid for Persian miniatures. Indian and Turkish works were as much affected, suggesting that the drop in prices is oot directly linked to the Middle Eastern situation.

Among the more striking cases on April 27 was a unique Turkish manuscript of a famous Persian romance adapted into Turkish by the poet Shaykhi. The miniatures show it to be one of the earliest works of the Ottoman school in

It was probably done shortly after the Turkish congest of Constantinople (Istanbul) in 1453, of which the memory may linger in one of the illustrations: Fortified walls appear in the distance overlooking straits where galleons of European design may be seen. The miniature also provides undisputable evidence of the contribution of the Persian school of Shiraz to the emergence of this art in the third quarter of the 15th century. A key piece to the history of Ottoman art and its links to that of Iran, this manuscript was downright cheap at £5,018.

The trend continued on the following day. Only a few splendid items soared sky-high.

A miniature from an Iodian manuscript illustrating the very beginnings of the Pahari school in the late 17th century zoomed to £27,870. The leaves of the manuscript, which was broken up, are now scattered between London, Boston, Cleveland and other cities. One of the most delicate miniatures ever done by Mansur, a famous painter working for the Moghul court in the early 17th century, went

But there were several disappointments oot least of all concerning two gorgeous illustrations of the Bhagavata Purana executed in Nepal about 1775 — sold for £1,672 and £1,561. Miniatures of the 19th-century Westernizing school, now dubbed "Company School," which were doing so well last year, partly thanks to Stuart Cary Welch's delightful book on the subject, were not uniformly sucessful last week.

Despite the artistic diversity of the manuscripts and miniatures sold, they all went through comparable ops and downs. This has little to do with the specific difficulties that the market has suffered and still suffers from deficient scholarship generating miscataloguing. It is primarily to do with economics, and its reflection of worldwide uncertainty.

Sumer, Assur, Babylonia at Petit Palais

PARIS — The history of what is now Iraq goes back more than 5,000 years, and the Baghdad Mueum has some stunning vestiges of its colossal past, some 230 of which are oow to be seen at the Petit Palais ("Sumer, Assur, Babyoce," to June 14).

The oldest pieces in the show (a bateh of small alabaster idols from Tell Es-Sawwan) date from 8,000 years ago. They are about 4 inches high and stylized with a touching simplicity. A few do oot even represent a human form, but a simple cometric shape 1 or 2 inches high.

Moving oo in time, we come to he dawn of urban civilization, the oldest city state being that of Uruk, where the written word first emerged out of prehistoric silence. That was 5,000 years ago, and the evendon was a consequence of the new society's trying to solve the difficulties involved in managing relatively large populations, great quantities of merchandise and oumerous civil servants. The first writing appeared in the a kiog of Hatra and a set of small alabaster votive statues that look as quaint and familiar as rococo angels. It closes with items from the Islamic period, 8th- to 13thcentury iewelry and pottery. One of the earliest finds of the urban period shown at the Petit Palais is a collection of clay chits used as pebbles by the accountants of

Also at the Petit Palais is an exhibioon entitled "L'Art du Japon Eternel" and composed of some 170 items from the Idemitsu collection (to May 31). They represent a selection from among the thousands of items assembled by Sazo Idemitsu throughout his long life (he was born in 1885).

He spent most of his life as the head of a company, created on a modest scale in 1911, which was to become a powerful organization during the postwar years, with five petroleum refineries, nine oil tank-form of accounting records (in the ers. 8,500 service stations and present show we have a clay tablet from Urak dated 3,200 B.C.) but also of contracts which led to another Mesopotamian art form, the

This delightful bittle object, of which numerous examples are to be seen in the show, was the earliest form of "signature" which parties to a contract pressed down upon the fresh clay tablet that served as a record.

It was only later that writing came to serve historical and literary purposes, and the show also includes one of the first literary texts. It dates from 2,600 B.C. and relates the legeod of King Lugal-banda of Uruk,

Archeologists, working in the arid elimate of the plains between the Euphrates and the Tigris rivers, have unearthed entire bbraries of elay tablets, and resourceful scholars have gradually managed to decipher their forgotten writ-ings, so that it has become possible to reconstruct much of the history and beliefs of civilizations that had sunk into oblivion for several mil-

Tablets and stelae with cuneiform inscriptions are shown in some oumbers, and most must strike the uninformed viewer as a challenge to any man's eyesight.

The civilization of Sumer is represented by a oumber of striking pieces, including two splendid praying figures with immense inlaid eyes (2.750 B.C.) and a mutilated but admirable bronze head of a Sumerian king.

Babylon is illustrated by some splendid low reliefs from royal palaces, some extremely refined (and probably imported) pieces of carved ivory designed as parts of furniture (throne and bed) and a sixth-century, enameled brick, lowrelief bull that once decorated the

The catalogue states that most of his collection has never been shown in public before, neither in Japan nor elsewhere.

The show at the Petit Palais includes 85 paintings, including more than 40 screens (often in pairs), 26 works of calligraphy, an equal oumber of ceramic pieces and some 30 objects ranging from laquered boxes, kimonos, theater masks, swords to bronzes.

It may be that the screens and the various decorative objects are the most readily accessible to a non-Japanese viewer. The screens show extraordinary decorative refinement, daring economy of compositioo and the depth and warmth that emanates from the gold leaf; the earthenware and laquer are noteworthy for their delicate and fanciful craftsmanship.

A peculiar charm of Japanese esthetics is the relization that an imperfect form can have more beauty than a perfect one. This is apparent in ceramic works, such as tea bowls, that can be assymetrical and have the appearance of improvisation, It can also be seen in works of calligraphy and the hasty drawings that sometimes go with

Aside from this, it would seem that the aspect of Japanese sensibility that is most easily understood by Westerners is the feeling for nature that dominates much of that country's art.

This feeling sometimes takes on conventional forms, (as it does in much of Western art of, say, the 18th and 19th centuries) but at baroqueness (derived from the Chinese) or a pure, stylized simplicity that is apparently more essentially Japanese The Idemitsu collection essen-tially reflects a concern with the traditional forms of Japanese art in an age of great mutations, an age in which Japan, which may have had a timeless quality in former centuries, has clearly accepted the dizzying flux of history and change. — Michael Gibson

At P.S.1, the Institute for Art and Urban Resources in an old public school building in Queen's, 4,000 people attended the opening of an exhibition called "New York/New Wave," which this summer goes to Forte Del Belved-ere in Florence. It was a mad crush of punk

Here, too, there was a looseness and a goofy nonchalance coupled with a desperate need for nonchalance coupled with a desperate need for oew meaning from the streets, the subways, public toilets. Basquiat (who also calls himself Samo) is influenced by Twombly, who himself, was inspired by anonymous graffit; Fred Brathwaite, who once illegally spraypainted subway cars, oow legally paints on laminated

It goes back into the subways with the humorous bomunculi by Haring that follow you all the way to the 86th street IRT subway exit. Here too is the straight on, deadpan look in Jon Rudo's cars and in the faces by Robin Winters. Here too are crude paint, smears and dribbles, work far from the museum and art history, but close to the night world of punk and rock and undiluted modern drives.

With its accent on raw instinct, right or wrong, the "New Wave" is supposed to have begun in Italy (Cucchi, Chia, etc., have shown at the Stedelijk Museum in Amsterdam, the Kunsthalle in Basel and are already in the "New Acquisitions" at MOMA) and has oow become an international tidal wave.

At P.S. I no one was over 30 years old. The kids with their unwashed faces had bright eyes, minds and hands. No one hassled with their instant success. But despite all the smart aleckiness, there was a groping, a turning back to where all human art originally came from — those prehistoric walls on which we painted our hopes and fears to entice the gods.

Where are we going? The New Figurative is well established and has its built-in limits. Video, land and body art are fading. There are all kinds of oew abstraction, even a fourth generation of Abstract Expressionists.

Coming out of P.S. I and seeing the fantas-tic New York skyline glitter over the compounded garbage of the empty lots and side-walks of Queens, one wondered about the New Wave. Good, bad, horrid, avid or genuine, it is a kick in the teeth of art history, a turning point. It could well be a new start.

When the study for the head of a negress for Picasso's "Demoiselles d'Avignon" was stolen, the thieves cut out the upper right-hand cor-ner, presumably to include with a ransom note. The painting was recovered, but not the missing square. John Bull relined the canvas, inserted the missing corner and repainted it. Picasso clearly approved, for he then signed the careful imitation. Of all the challenges in his career, none has equaled what confronted John Bull in Iran. where he helped prepare for the opening of the Tehran Museum of Contemporary Art. He still vividly recalls the chill that passed over him in the furnacelike heat of a Tehran summer when he inspected the works stored in a Qajar palace near the bazaar.

John and David Bull are representatives of what has sometimes been termed the European as opposed to the American approach to restoration. In the United States, major stress is laid on a background in chemistry rather than the fine arts. The resulting scientific approach has provoked major disputes, and last year led Washington's National Gallery to declare a temporary moratorium on the cleaning of can-

John Buil reflects that both the best and the worst work are done in the United States. The danger, he feels, is that a painting becomes reduced to the arrangement of molecules in its pigments. "I have seen canvases become em-balmed, their surfaces flattened, drained of all sensitivity and feeling. Pictures should take risks, just as human beings do."

Such arguments are not lost on American museums and collectors. In 1978, David Bull closed his prosperous London business and moved to California as conservator of paintings for the Getty Museum, and on April Fool's Day, 1980, he reluctantly laid down his one-hair brush to become director of the Norton Simon Museum. He has now returned to private practice in California, in affiliation with John Bull in London. John's daughter Sarah is a paper restorer at the British Museum and has a waiting list of private clients. With the contagious charm and easy ele-gance that complement their professional

European Automakers to Campaign for Japanese Export Curbs

By Paul Lewis New York Times Service

PARIS — European automobile manufacturers plan an immediate campaign to cut back Japanese car exports to Western Europe if Japan agrees to restrict auto sales to the United States, industry sources said prior to Friday's U.S.-Japan accord. The European industry, which, with the notable exception of Mercedes-Benz, has been pressing for almost a year for some form of restriction on Japan's growing share of its market, believes its case will be strengthened greatly if the U.S. gains concessions

[EEC officials, commenting on the Tokyo accord limiting Japanese car sales to the United States, were quoted Friday in Brussels by Reuters as saying they hoped this would be followed by a similar pact with

Up to now the 10 EEC governments have been unable to agree on a common approach to Japan on behalf of their auto makers, largely because West Germany, and to a lesser extent Britain, oppose imWednesday, Volkswagen President Toni port restrictions on principle.

European automakers believe European governments would feel obliged at least to insure that Japan did not increase its share of the European market to compensate for lost sales in the United States. Japan's share of the European market, at 10 percent, is less than half the 25 percent market share it enjoys in the United States.

Dual Warning

Diplomats point out that European governments and the U.S. administration were warning each other last year that if either made a voluntary export restraint agreement with the Japanese, the other would be forced to follow suit and the world would edge back toward protectionism. It thus appears that the Reagan administration has given way first, making it tough stance in favor of free trade.

Wednesday, Volkswagen President Toni Schmucker said the West German government and the EEC's Executive Commission in Brussels were already working on "plans" to insure Europe is not swamped by Japanese cars turned back from the U.S. market after Japan agrees to voluntary restraint.

Privately, high French industry sources say most European automobile producers want to see Japan's market share pushed back to somewhere between its present level and the 7 percent Japanese producers held in 1979.

Last November, a delegation of European auto manufacturers went to Tokyo to complain directly to the Japanese about the damage to employment that Japan's European sales drive was causing.

Japan's market share has grown fastest in West Germany, rising from 5.6 percent in 1979 to 10.4 per-cent last year. In Britain it edged up from 10.8 to 11.9

to to 25.8 percent and in the Netherlands from 19.5 to 26,4 percent. France has for some years limited Japan's share of its auto market to 3 percent, while Italy has traditional restrictions that virtually exclude Japanese cars altogether.

Nevertheless, both countries' industries are suffering from increased Japanese competition in other Eu-ropean markets, especially in Belgium, the Netherlands and Denmark, which do not have auto indus-

Chrysler, Mitsubishi Strengthen Ties in New Marketing Accord

By Patrick Boyle Los Angeles Times Service

DETROIT --- Chrysler and its Japanese partner, Mitsubishi Motors, have entered a new agreement that one Chrysler official said could lead eventually to still closer links between the two auto manufacturers.

In a joint statement released Thursday here and in Tokyo, the two companies said they had laid the groundwork for a partnership that will provide more types of Mitsubishi vehicles for Chrysler dealers until 1990; allow Mitsubishi to establish its own dealer network in the United States beginning in 1983; and open the "possibility of a future invest-ment" by Mitsubishi in Chrysler.

Chrysler spokesmen declined to elaborate on the five-paragraph joint statement. But a high-level Chrysler official, who asked oot to be identified, confirmed that the goal of the two companies is a future mere

"It's the first step to a merger, but not a merger in the classical sense where you combine manage-ment," he said. "It could lead to an equity investment (by Mitsubishi Chrysler) or a capital infusion. That's the hope, and this agreement is an expression of commit-ment to work toward that"

The agreement, reached after three days of meetings this week in Palm Springs, Calif., between Chrysler Chairman Lee Iacocca and Mitsubishi Chairman Tomio Kubo, was viewed by analysts and government officials as yet another sign that the outlook for the ailing U.S. company is improving.

Treasury Secretary Donald T. similar statements follow most recent price boosts.

Chrysler Loan Guarantee Board, said Thursday the Chrysler-Mitsuhishi announcement was encourag-

"The loan guarantee board has been urging Chrysler to seek an in-fusion of capital through merger or acquisition," Mr. Regan said. "Although the Chrysler announcement does not seem to go that far, the agreement with Mitsubishi appears to be a positive step for the

A Chrysler official' said Mitsubishi agreed to finance shipments of the cars to Chrysler dealers for the next decade, ending the month-by-month financing arrangements under which the two companies had been operating.

And Chrysler has agreed to let Mitsubishi establish its own dealer network, beginning in the 1983 model year. Uoder the arrange-ment, Chrysler dealers will still sell any product that is offered by the Mitsubishi dealers. In addition, Chrysler will begin importing other Mitsubishi Japanese prodncts to sell through its dealers in the 1982 model year.

Chrysler also said Thursday it would raise prices on its 1981 cars an average 2.6 percent, or about $194. The anouncement came one day after Ford announced a price increase of 2.1 percent, or $178.

Chrysler's increase, which includes optional equipment but does not apply to cars already in dealer inventories, was effective Friday, the automaker said. Chrysler said the increases are necessary to offset rising costs but added that it will oot raise prices again during the 1981 model year. Ford and General Motors issued similar statements following their

NEW YORK — A surprise jump in the broker loan rate by a major bank further unsettled an edgy New York Stock Exchange Friday, and prices ended broadly lower in moderate trading.

Irving Trust raised its broker loan rate to 201/2 percent from 18 percent, a much larger than usual increase. Irving said the big rise resulted from the recent surge in the federal funds rate.

Some other big banks raised their broker loan rates to 1814 percent from 18. The moves suggest the prime rate will rise.

The Dow Jones industrial average, which lost 26.30 points the previous three sessions, slipped 2.16 to close at 995,59. It skidded 6.57 points Thursday, closing be-low the 1,000 level for the first time in 11 sessions. Friday's declines paced advances five to three as turnover remained about the same at 48.36 million shares compared with Thursday's 47,97 mil-

New orders for U.S. manufactured goods rose moderately in March but factory inventories also continued to pile up in what a Commerce Department analyst called a "mixed picture" of the na-tion's economic health.

report Thursday said new factory orders rose 1.3 percent in March. with orders for non-military planes and parts making up about $1.8 billion of the $2.1 billion increase in the $164.9 billion total orders

The value of manufacturers' inventories rose 0.8 percent in March, after rising 1.1 percent in February, with about half the new increase coming in the petroleum industry. Inventories of finished goods rose 2.5 percent in March, a much bigger increase than those recorded for stockpiles of raw materials and work in process.

Bank economists said the dollar's recent strength against the Deutsche mark was probably a major reason for the trade deterio-ration because it had raised the LONDON — The dollar put in a lackluster performance Friday after a dramatic week's rise that left it at a seven-year high against the French franc Thursday.

Prior to the May Day holiday Friday, the French franc plunged against the dollar, apparently re-flecting fears of a Socialist victory in the May 10 French presidential election. Foreign exchange dealers said monetary authorities had poured large amounts of cash onto world money markets in the past two weeks to defend the French currency. The dollar stood at 5.2375 French francs Thursday, after hitting 5.24 Wednesday. After a show of strength Thursday, the dollar also eased to 2.2040 Deutsche marks at the close Friday in holiday-affected trading, below its opening of 2.2185 and the previous close of 2.2103, deal-

The dollar closed at 2.0155 Swiss francs, down from its open-ing 2.0265 and Thursday's 2.0192. The British pound closed at $2.1430, against $2.13675 and $2.1410, respectively.

In New York Friday, the dollar was below its opening levels in thin trading resulting from the Enropean holiday, dealers said. The dollar slipped to a low of around 2.20 Deutsche marks at one stage belore recovering to 2,2055, although it was still below the opening 2,2135.

Dealers attributed the decline to dollar selling by the International Monetary Market in Chicago, as well as a slight easing in the federal funds rate.

The dollar was quoted at 2.0180 Swiss francs, compared with an opening 2.0230, and at 215.72 yen, against 216. Sterling gained to $2.1452 from $2.1385.

France spent the equivalent of 1.8 billion French francs ($346 million) in both dollars and Deutsche marks last week in market interventions to support the French currency.

Renewed strength of the dollar backed by high U.S. interest rates and optimism over President Reagan's economic policies has been a major problem for West European monetary anthorities.

United States have caused concern in West Europe where some central banking authorities have been pushed into higher rates than they want as well as support operations

GEORGE ORWELL A Life By Bernard Crick. Atlantic/Little, Brown.

Illustrated. 473 pp. $17.95. Reviewed by John Leonard

R EVIEWING a book by Lewis women in Orwell's life, without being wery instructive; perhaps the widow's thumb is on his tongue. But he never which sets out to interpret - to be at the deepest meaning and cause of every act — is very well when applied to a man, but it is a dangerous method of approaching a work of art. Done with absolute thoroughness, it could cause art itself to vanish." Bernard Crick, a professor of polities at the University of London and the editor of Political Quarterly, takes this admonition so seriously that he omits most of Orwell's art from his new biography; he will stick with the evasive man, who was not above rearranging his own past.

The result is absorbing but odd.

Crick admires Orwell without quite trusting him. Orwell, according to Crick, was a political theorist on the order of Hobbes and Jonathan Swift, a late-blooming Socialist of invincible sincerity, "a revolutionary in love with the Edwardian era" and - in the words of V.S. Pritchett --- "a man who went native in his own country."

Fiddling With the Facts

Still, he fiddled with his facts. Prep school was not so awful as he said it was. He was more ambivalent than he would have us believe about his role as an imperial policeman, he had his doubts about the Communist Party before he went to Spain, he was rather tardy in coming to support England's rearmament against the Fascist threat and so on.

In no sense does Crick seek to den no sense does Crick seek to de-bunk. His business is to polish the warts after he has exposed them. If Orwell occasionally fudged the truth about his Burmese days, the famous hanging, being down and out in either Paris or London, well, the fudging was in the service of a higher cause. That cause was to insist on the idea of the citizen as an active and angry participant in the culture. If he rarely ad-dressed, in his journalism, such subjects as music, theater, art, schools or travel, it was because politics - power and class — was more important.

The myth — that once upon a time there was a decent man — doesn't suffer. Crick still subscribes to it, and so do I after having read his inquest. The absent father was really absent, St. Cyprian's and Eton actually hap-pened, Burma was traumatic, Paris and London smelled, Spain was dis-gusting, and the Stalinoid English left was just as despicable as he described it. Orwell did, indeed, teach himself "the plain style" for which he is deservedly celebrated, and he taught himself in the only way a writer can by doing it over until you get it right. When he began to write, an acquain-tance recalls, "he was like a cow with a musket."

And he was a patriot. And he could be accused of what is now called homophobia: See his several references to "the pansy left." And, from school days, he was obsessed with the rats that would ultimately attack Winston Smith in "1984," And, exactly as we expected, he was influenced de sively by the fiction of H.G. Wells, Jack London and other adventure books for boys, not to mention Blake and Shakespeare.

Crick is straightforward about the engages the women in Orwell's fiction, and this brings me to my impatience with a book as plainspoken and tough-minded as Orwell himself would have wished, even though Orwell didn't want any biography at Crick's Orwell is a fish in political waters, a thin and glittering polemic. Art is either humbug or reserved for another hand and another net. Crick is pulling on a single line. Women, humor, loneliness, self-doubt, envy and vengeance are mere ripples or shad-ows on the narrative. They vanish. Crick has invented the Orwell he so do we all. Mary McCarthy, in "The Writing on the Wall," was inclined to think that Orwell would have supported U.S. adventurism in Vietnam. Raymond Williams, in his "Modern Masters" monograph, sug-gested that Orwell had somehow "tied the knot" of Western thinking into a Cold War bind. George Woodcock seems to feel that Orwell was always a closet imperialist. The Freudians look for the missing father, the Stalinists would prefer that the anarchists were among the missing, and Noel Annan, in a recent issue of the New York Review of Books, invokes Orwell to explain what is happening today to the British Labor Party.

He can't be Plastic Man, certainly not in the service of so many disparate causes. He invented himself each of us should have done, as Melville did. Maybe we invent him, instead of inquiring into our own specifications in designing a new personal model. He was, on the whole, right about the 20th century, but he was also and ultimately an artist. Those rats are real, and so was the aspidistra. They are real because the citizen who imagined them invented a way of writing it all down that was better than anybody else could manage at the time. The country in which he went native was the English lan-

Sao and Making the Statement

PARIS — On a relatively sun-ny spring afternoon, Sao was seated in a Paris tearcom wearing, as she usually does, a floor-length black coat. It looked like a coat but, says Sao firmly, and everything she says is uttered firmly and at a terrific clip, it is not in fact a coat at all. It is a statement

"The sleeves are entirely made with tucks stitched by hand with silk thread. On the yoke there are scallops. What is the impression, birdlike or fishlike?"

Neither.
"Right," said Sao. "It's sculp-ture. I didn't intend it to look like scales. The idea is to give di-

"I don't like symbols, I like statements." She was riffling through a large portfolio of ber wearable art. "My last show at the Corcoran was a black wedding dress with a 40-yard-long veil and two maids of honor, also in hlack. People said what is the symbolism? There is none. It is a statement. Some women said to me when I got married I felt like that. I don't necessarily recom-mend being married," Sao add-ed. At 35 sbe has done so twice, first to a Dane, at present to a Washington lawyer.

Emphasis on the Idea

She makes her statements in a Washington atelier with the help of two Spanish seamstresses. The clothes are heautifully made but she doesn't like to talk about that because it sounds too craftsy.

The emphasis is not on the fact that they're handmade, it's on the idea. People who write about it get carried away hy the detail which is so beautiful that they don't see the statement."

Sao's work is not to be found in a shop: she is an artist, not a dressmaker, and her clients are collectors, not clotheshorses. "This cape," she said, showing a picture of a swooping and sumptuous garment on a coat banger, "can be hung like a tapestry when it's not worn. That's why h show in museums and galleries. At present there are two Sao shows on in Paris: at the Portuguese Cultural Center, where she is making a statement about clothes as art, and at the American Cultural Center on Boulevard Raspail where ber statement is about commitment. The American Center effort involved getting more than 500 meters of black and white veiling to flank another black wedding dress, which was illuminated by torches on opening night. "I think a wedding is a timeless commitment that has lost its meaning," Sao said, "White no longer has any purity - who is a virgin anymore? - and people aren't aware of the commitment they should feel. That's wby they should wear hlack. Marriage isn't a fun game.

My grandmother married in hlack, so did my mother. In Denmark the wedding dress is black. The first time I got married it was in white, no wonder it didn't work. The second time it was in hlack, I couldn't make the same mistake twice."

Sao was born in Portugal, where she had eight years of needlework in a convent, and she studied design in Denmark. Her name is an abhreviation of Maria de Conceicao (she has considerately dropped her five other names for professional pur-poses), which means Maria of the

Multiples of Handbags

Sao's works are one-of-a-kind although she has made multiples of handbags. There is, she says, no limit to the statements she can make. "Every time I make a statement I think of another one. Sao has done knitwork, collage waistcoats and even cummer-bunds and bow ries. A bow tie speaks volumes, of course, but what statement could a cummer-bund possibly make? "My statement is not in one piece, it is in an entire show," she replied with a hint of impatience.

In Los Angeles, Billie Jean King's attorney says the tennis star will file suit against a hairdresser who contends she and Mrs. King lived together as homosexual lov-ers during the early 1970s. Marilyn Barnett, 32, a former employee of Mrs. King has filed a "palimony" suit seeking an interest in the house that she says Mrs. King bought for her. Ms. Barnett, confined to a wheelchair after a fall in the late 1970s, has lived in the house since 1974. The tennis star said in a statement that Ms. Barnett's allegations were "unitrue and unfounded" and that she was "shocked and disappointed" by the action of her former secretary. Mrs. King's attorney Dennis Wasser, said he will file suit to have Ms. Barnett evicted from the house, owned by Mrs. King and her husband, Larry.

Britain's Princess Margaret has developed a close friendship with a wealthy Swedish eccentric who bears a striking resemblance to her old boyfriend, Roddy Llewellyn, London newspapers say. Guy Munthe, 32, was spotted riding a motorcycle in London with a parrot on the handlebars, and he somtimes sleeps in a coffin, the Daily Mirror said. Munthe, grandson of the writer Axel Munthe, was de-scribed by the New Standard as a "slim Nordic-looking bachelor." News reports said the 50-year-old Margaret and Munthe have visited. each other's homes in London and have dined publicly. Gov. Hogh Carey's new 3 plans to ask a Roman Catholi-bunal to annul two of her prethree marriages on grounds one husband was a bigamist another dld not like women. New York Times reported. The per said that Evangefine Goulet of Carey, who wed the New hap governor in a Greek Orthodox has emony April II, said she bopes at tribunal will annul the marria so the governor can be restored, good standing in the eves of ad Catholic church. At the start of degovernor's courtship to the wealthy real estate entreprened from Chicago, Mrs. Gouletas we described as a widow, but her first husband was found to be alive at well in California, and subseque ly two other marriages were reprized — all three ending in divorwhich is not recognized by to Roman Catholic Church. The sa ond marriage, to George Kalteza was a civil ceremony never reco-nized by the Greek church. Sin. the Roman church also does n recognize civil ceremonies, th marriage would not figure in the church's attitude toward t. Carey-Gouletas union.

Although Frank Sinatra will z: pear in concert in South Afri, this summer, a spokesman for the entertainer says the contract wi ban racial segregation at the pe-formances. Publicist Lee Soften said a clause was included in Sin: tra's contract prohibiting segreg. tion during the July 24 to Aug. concerts at Sun City in B phuthatswana. The clause read Promoter warrants and repr sents that there will be no segreg. tion practiced at Sinatra periol mances in Sun City, either in th hotel or the site of the performances, and that all people, regardles of their race, color or creed, will b allowed to use all the facilities of Promoter and Southern Sun He tels in Bophuthatswana. -SAMUEL JUSTIC
